Caitlin L. Bronner practices general commercial litigation with a particular focus on handling commercial litigation cases that involve the following matters: construction and design; intellectual property, including copyright, unfair competition and trademark matters; complex contractual disputes; title company claims; and alternative entity litigation surrounding complex disputes that involve Delaware limited liability companies and limited partnerships.

A commercial dispute can tie up valuable time and money. Believing that litigation should be a last resort, Caitlin labors to reach an efficient and effective solution for clients dealing with complex matters. She has nearly a decade of experience counseling clients on how to avoid costly litigation by anticipating potential problem areas. Through collaborative efforts, Caitlin develops long-term strategies that take into account current legal issues; but when litigation is necessary, Caitlin remains a staunch advocate for her clients and their rights. Over the course of her career, she has represented a variety of entities, including limited partnerships, public benefit corporations, title companies and individuals.

Prior to joining Ingram Caitlin worked with rare books and manuscripts at the New York offices of Sotheby's auction house. During law school, Caitlin was a member of the editorial board of the Moot Court Honor Society, and interned for the Hon. Jane Restani, Chief Judge of the United States Court of International Trade. Caitlin has been named a Rising Star by the Super Lawyers legal directory.
